SAYS CHINESE REDS FORM INTERNATIONAL LEGION

The Chinese Communists are using Japanese prisoners of war in North China, and refuse to repatriate them "until the revolution in China and Japan is complete," according to Takeshi Minami, former chief of Japanese Police at Sainei, North Korea, who escaped from a prison camp in Manchuria.

Only a few Japanese prisoners of war are still in the camps. The others, approximately 60,000 in all, are serving as advisers and technicians with the Chinese Communist Forces, or have been enrolled in an International Legion, composed of Koreans, Russians, and Japanese, which the Chinese have organized in Harbin.
